Oundle International Organ Week

It is round the newly built Frobenius organ in Oundle School Chapel that Oundle International Organ Week has been planned. Built last year and inaugurated in style in January by Carlo Curley, this magnificent instrument has already attracted great interest.

Incorporating also a Summer School for Young Organists, the Week has assembled an impressive list of performers to more than justify the word 'international'. To add to the combined talents of the British team of Peter Hurford, Gillian Weir, John Scott, James Parsons and Sheila Lawrence, we have István Ella, Peter Planavsky and Donald Sutherland from abroad.

István Ella from Hungary has developed an exciting international career since winning the 1976 J.S. Bach International Organ Competition in Bruges. Donald Sutherland is on the faculty at the Peabody Conservatory of Music in Baltimore USA and his programme of new American music, including some Bach recently discovered at Yale, will be eagerly awaited.

Peter Planavsky from St Stephen's Cathedral Vienna will also be appearing in festivals in Warwick, Cheltenham and Oxford on this visit. Among his formidable talents is his skill in improvisation – something that should not be overlooked in the Bach tercentenary year.

The Frobenius organ will be heard in other concerts in the School Chapel. The opening concert is a French programme given by the 47 strong Chetham's Orchestra. This is the School that provides so many of the finalists in the BBC Young Musician of the Year Competition. The orchestra is joined by John Scott in Poulenc's Organ Concerto.

The Choir of Christ Church Oxford gives its last concert under Francis Grier under an attractive programme that will be recorded for Radio 3. At the final concert when Gillian Weir will present awards to the most promising of the Summer School students (who will also play on the Frobenius) a further contrast is offered by the Fine Arts Brass Ensemble. This young group knows how to entertain, as will be shown when they let their hair down after this concert!

Earlier in the week, Harvey and the Wallbangers in the Stahl Theatre, will also offer some lighter, but very stylish, relief. Since filling their Oundle concert in the Autumn, the group has really taken off and has been heavily featured on television.

For two concerts we go outside Oundle. Elton Hall has a great collection of paintings and furniture and will provide a splendid setting for London Baroque and the popular eighteenth century programme it presents. Fotheringhay Church where the highly acclaimed Peterborough String Orchestra appears with James Parsons and Sheila Lawrence will be an equally imposing venue for the concert on 19 July.

At both of these concerts, Special Suppers are on offer and we hope Oundle International Organ Week will appeal on many levels. To those who are travelling to Oundle and its beautiful countryside for the first time, there will be pleasant surprises and we hope memorable hospitality. For those who know the area or live there, we hope we are providing a major new event which is a fitting contribution to Music European Year. Already plans for 1986 are being made, but the essential thing now is to enjoy the riches of the 1985 Week.

WHERE IS OUNDLE?

Oundle International Organ Week has attracted great interest from all over Britain and abroad. The town of Oundle is a beautiful market town in East Northamptonshire and is very accessible by road. It is about 8 miles from the A1 on a level with Peterborough, where there is an excellent train service from King's Cross Station London and the North. From the west there are good roads from Northampton, Market Harborough and Leicester and all these towns and places like Cambridge, Bedford and Nottingham are less than an hour away.

For a map of the places where events in the Week take place see below.
