South Bank Gamelan Ensemble with

Wahyuningsih Widi Rahayu, dancer

7.30pm Oundle School Great Hall

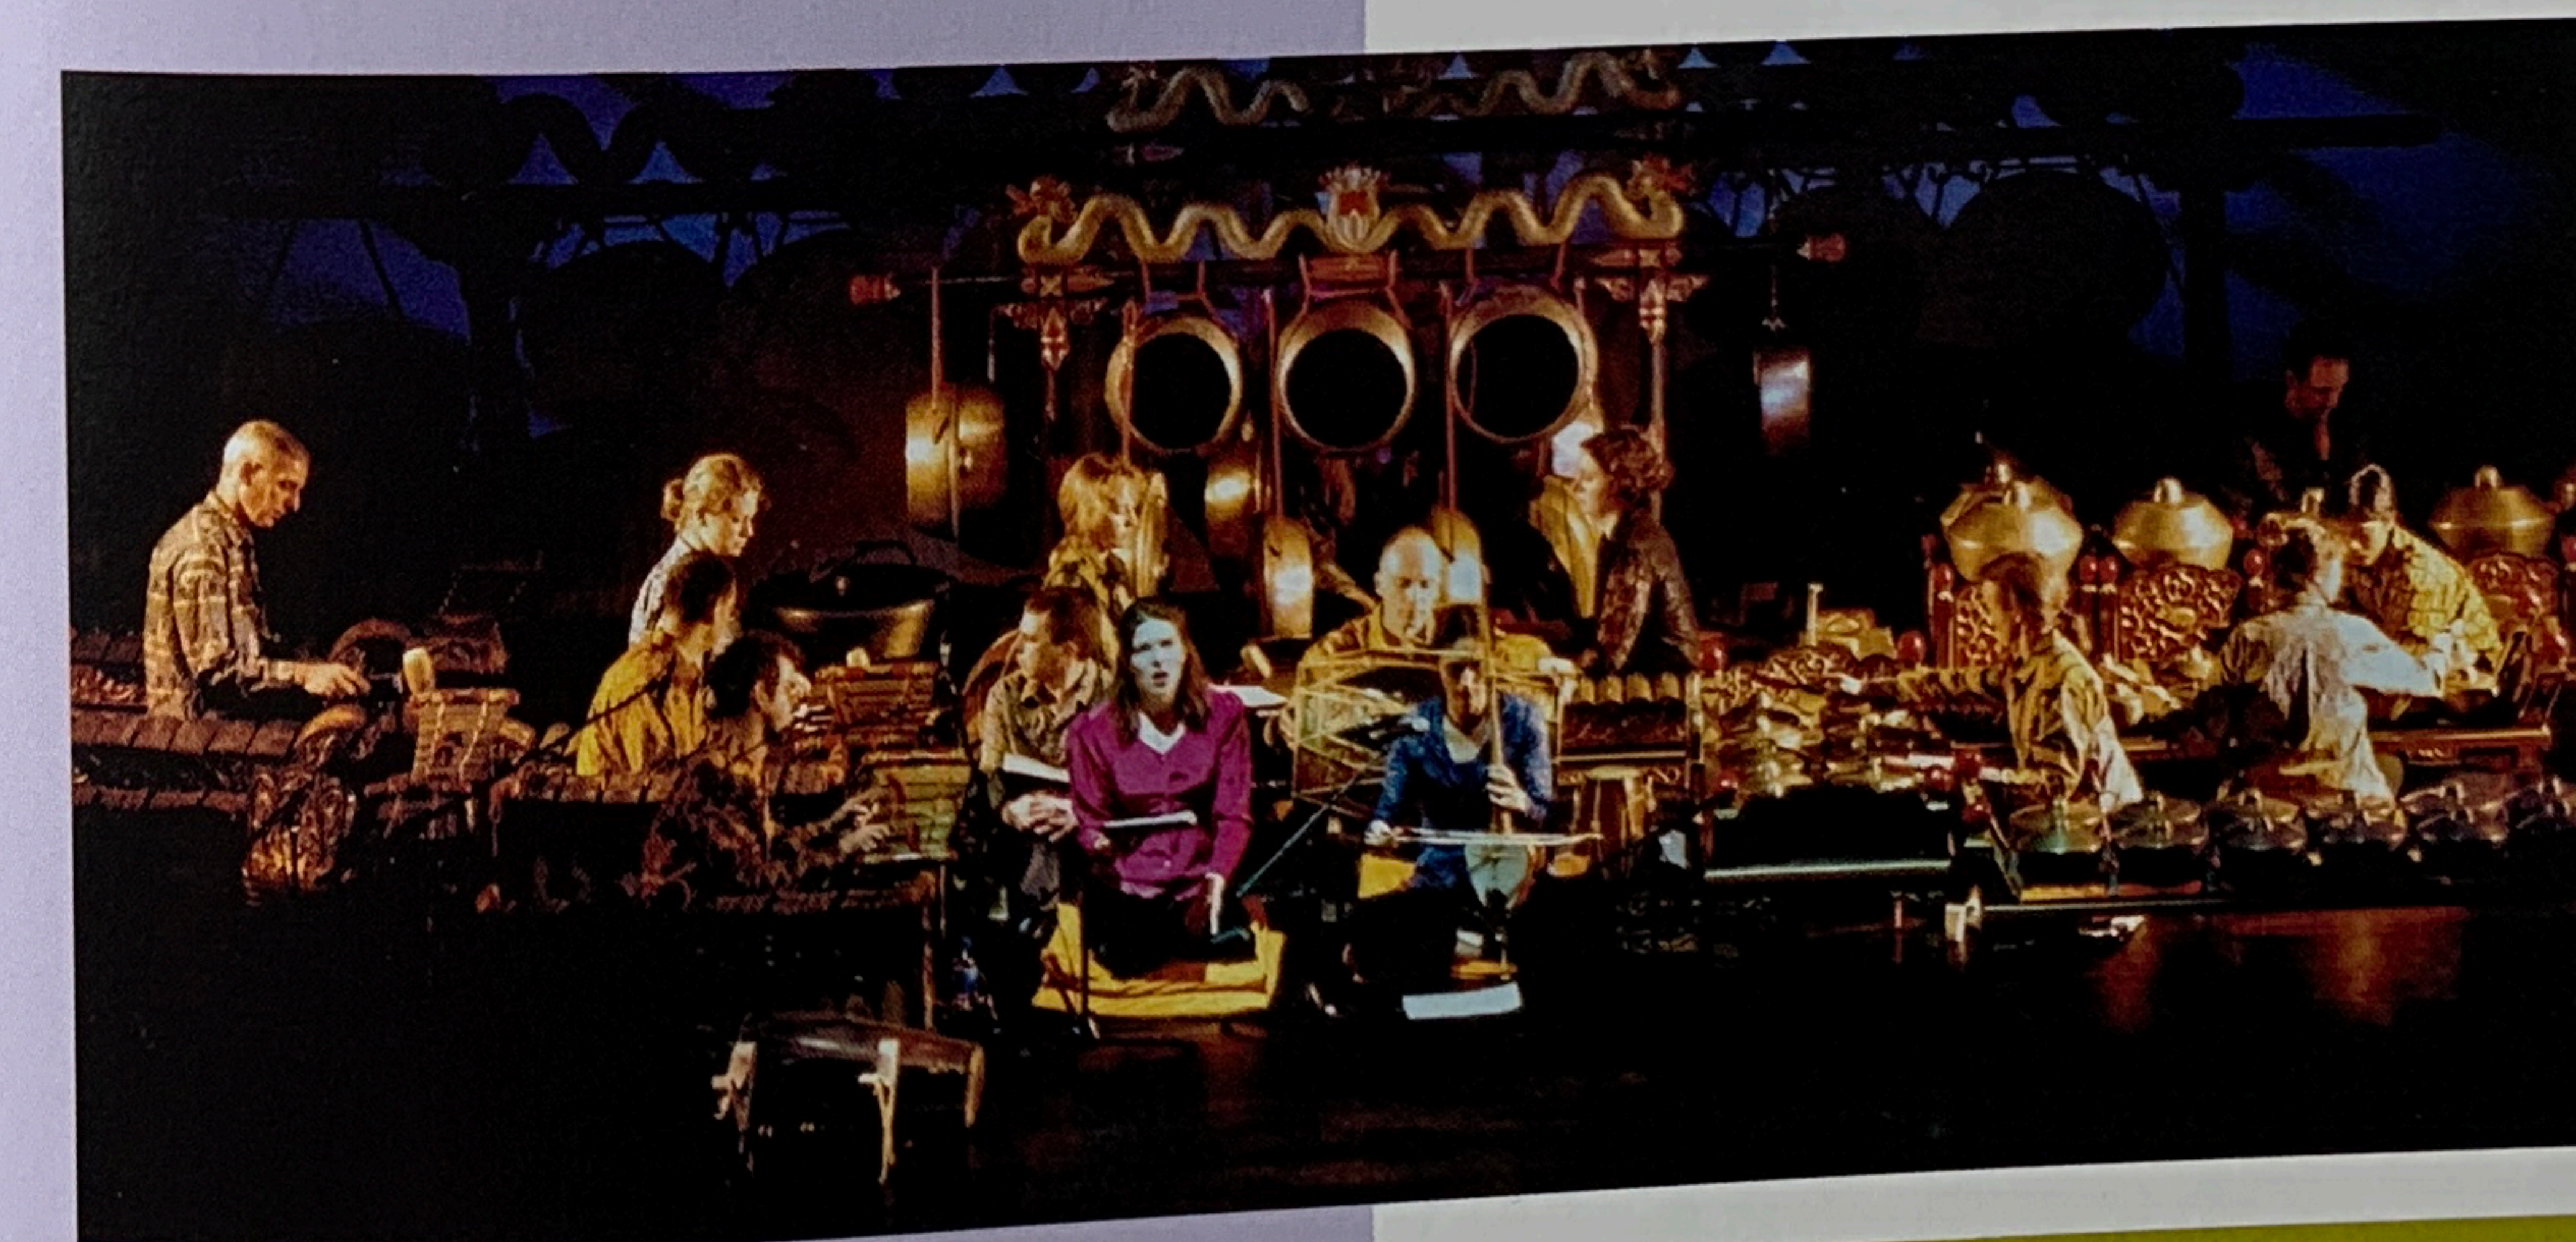

Tickets £13 / £5 under 21

Gamelan is an Indonesian orchestra found mainly on the islands of Java and Bali. A full Javanese gamelan uses around 20 musicians and includes bronze gongs and metallophones, a two-stringed fiddle, xylophone, bamboo flute, zither, voices, and a set of skin drums. The sound world of the gamelan is enchanting and mellifluous, its moods by turns serene and playful, refined and exciting.

The South Bank Gamelan Players are ensemble-in-residence at the Royal Festival Hall and most of the musicians have undertaken extensive study in Java. Working closely with dancers, puppeteers and composers from Indonesia, Europe and the USA, the group has established an international reputation both for its performances of traditional Javanese music and for its championing of new music for gamelan.

'The music is fantastically rich – melodically, rhythmically, texture (such orchestration!) and above all formally. It is a remarkable culture...'

French Film Season

In association with Oundle Cinema

Notre Musique (12A)

Director: Jean-Luc Godard (2004)

France 80 mins (subtitled)

9.45pm Arthur Marshall Room,
Oundle School Great Hall

Tickets £4

Part poetry, part journalism, part philosophy, Jean-Luc Godard's Notre Musique is a timeless meditation on war as seen through the prisms of cinema, text and image. Largely set at a literary conference in Sarajevo, the film draws on the conflagration of the Bosnian war, but draws too on the Israeli/Palestinian conflict, the brutal treatment of Native Americans, and the legacy of the Nazis.

Notre Musique is structured into three Dantean Kingdoms: Hell, Purgatory and Heaven. In the film real-life literary figures (including Arab poet Mahmoud Darwish and Spanish writer Juan Goytisolo) intermingle with actors and documentary meshes with fiction.

Notre Musique also follows the parallel stories of two Israeli Jewish women, one drawn to the light, the other drawn towards darkness.

The start of the film will be delayed if the previous concert over-runs.
